Gin

Plymouth Navy Strength 114 Proof

When gunpowder goes bang the 'proof' of the alcohol strength is at least 100 proof (114 US proof) or 57% alcohol by volume. The gunpowder was used as the test for proving there was the expected level of alcohol in the clear liquid. Plymouth Gin Navy Strength first went to sea in 1793 with the Royal Navy. The Royal Navy Supply Offices 'Pussers' needed to check what they were buying was what they had ordered. The Pussers would use gunpowder.

What would happen, we asked, if we took a traditional German "Lebkuchen" and distilled the ingredients into an organic spirit? What is a lebkuchen, you ask? A ginger snap! But not the mass-market, high-fructose junk at the supermarket. We're talking a real Pennsylvania Dutch ginger snap made with hearty blackstrap molasses and fresh ginger. The kind our mothers, grandmothers, and great-great-grandmothers used to make.

High West Double Rye

An unusual shotgun marriage of two rye whiskeys from two different distilleries back east, Double Rye combines a feisty high rye 2-year-old and a saddle smooth 16-year-old. With a taste profile of cinnamon, clove, anise, eucalyptus buttons, evergreen "gin-like" flavors and a vibrant finish.

Templeton Rye Whiskey

Starting with a formula born out of a family's need to maintain their livelihood during the Prohibition era, our master distillers utilize the original Kerkhoff family recipe – unique for the remarkably high rye content of its mash. For while today a mere 51 percent of the mash bill must be rye for a whiskey to legally be called a "rye", Templeton Rye uses a mash made up of more than 90 percent rye grains (and malted barley for the remainder).
